Nader Hayaux Goebel contributed to Ganar-Ganar magazine with an article on the role of sustainability, clean energy, and energy efficiency in driving Mexico's economic recovery.

Authored by Partner Santiago Medina and Associate Ana María Alpízar and Laura Villa the article examines Mexico's recent constitutional and regulatory energy reforms, highlighting the legal and policy framework promoting private sector participation in clean energy generation and sustainable development.

It provides an overview of the amendments to Articles 25, 27, and 28 of the Constitution and the new CFE Law, which recognize sustainability as a central axis for energy planning and risk management in response to climate change.

The article also underscores the importance of aligning Mexico's energy transition with global environmental commitments and outlines the opportunities that lie ahead for investors and developers focused on renewable energy.

By emphasizing regulatory certainty and a favorable legal environment, the authors present a forward-looking vision for achieving Mexico's climate goals while fostering innovation and economic resilience.
